MR. W. H. SANFORD'S HOUSE.
Among these is the house of Mr. W.

Use among the products of Colorado Springs architecture, and is very striking in the bold attempt to cut loose from the conventional designs of its neighboring buildings. The architecture is colonial, and the builder has adhered more closely than usual to this style. Nearly the only modern feature of the house is the fireplace which have been placed in every room on the first and and is ornamented by a broad veranda, its roof supported by simple white columns and its steps set in an imposing semi-circular flight. This front veranda is 50 feet long and 10 feet wide, while the circle in the center has a diameter of 10 feet. On each side of the main door are handsome casement windows, and above is a transom of lead glass set in a dove pattern. Above the porch in the wall of the second story a showy triple window is set.

The main hall is floored with oak, and a six-foot waistcoating of the same wood runs around it. The walls are of sand-lime brick, and have been painted a light terra cotta together with the ceiling. The hall has a measurement of 12 feet 10 inches by 25 feet 11 inches. Opposite the main door is an arch which separates the staircase hall. The wide stairs lead to the upper floor.

ALMOST WRESTLERS

THE FAVORITE AFTER-SPORT OF THE JAPANESE.

Cigars and Imported Beer—A Contest Between the Typhoon and the Stone Giant—The Combat Parade Preceding the Event—Little Typhoon the Victor.

YOKOHAMA, Aug. 17.—By this time I feel like at home in Japan. As I write I am sitting on a veranda which runs all around the "dome" on which all the guests' rooms open off by means of round glass doors. It is one of the hostesses near the main building, and one and a half of wood, one story high, and in the center being made to combine the native and European architecture, surrounded on all sides by a garden, enclosed in rail fences.

The weather is beautiful and warm, and every day is, but not as changeable as ours, and they never have that sticky atmosphere which makes certain days disagreeable in the states.

As there is my native guide coming to assist me, his services to-day I suppose he has come regularly every day to take me around to see the sights. Yesterday he had a real surprise in store for me. I witnessed a Japanese wrestling match, to which the natives attach the same importance we do to horse racing. It is yet the leading sport in Japan.

Some story to the wrestling ground, a sort of circus square in shape, with two ranges of galleries, made of white wood, running a round, which are reached by means of bamboo ladders.

At the entrance, above a tower, numerous scraps of paper, representing programmes, a ladder to wires, were flying, and a number of men, in a sort of military uniform, were shouting to every passerby, inducing him to enter. It was early yet, and only a few people had gathered down in the auditorium; but the audience was arriving rapidly. The ladies occupying the second tier, which are considered the best seats, were furnished with cushions. The price of admission was about one dollar. The first tier and ground floor cost about fifty cents. The ground floor is not roofed like the tier, nevertheless it is preferred by the sportsmen. There were also a few boxes reserved for the women.

The ring is a circular place, 20 feet in diameter, raised one or two feet above the ground floor. It is strewn with sand and surrounded with a double embankment of straw bales. It was covered with a elegant tiled roof, ornamented with lanterns and flags, and rising on four stanchion pillars.

My guide took me to the manager, an old Japanese man in a gorgeous theatrical costume, and I was permitted to go to the green room. It was large and bare with mats and cushions as the on'y furniture; a few "talamones," representing prize fighting on the wall, and it was lighted by a number of candles in iron holders of lacquer shade.

The two wrestlers, just arrived, accompanied by some of their friends and a number of coolies, carrying accouterments, containing the fighting requisites, were in dark green, waterproof paper. The two famous wrestlers, dressed the efficient women, and even enjoyed the privilege of wearing the only and the short sword.

They began slowly to unroll, standing together in a friendly manner and indicating—can you guess—in cigars and imported beer. Their wardrobe for the match consisted of two large silk saris decorated with ringed edges and around their joints.

They were too immense to owe. I never saw such sooty, broad, muscular built men before. Yet they were not fat. One, nicknamed the Typhoon, on account of his muscular strength and agility, was just a few inches high, the other was over five feet, an enormous, slim man of jawny colored flesh, weighing about 250 pounds. He was named the Stone Giant. Both had straight, black, and hair, (respect in the old fashioned way, and the order and great

Children were continually calling their names outside.

A few moments were announced, the wrestlers enjoying a light paragon. The men jumped up, making their joints crack and stretching their limbs and sapping them of slow of advantages of their bulk.

Then a drum on the tower was struck for the first time. Hearing this, for it meant the beginning of the performance, the wrestlers adorned themselves with velvet aprons, bearing their coat of arms, and with various precious belts, to some of former victories.

My guide and I turned to the front. The manager had taken his station in the arena and, continuing a grimacing announcement, the names and histories of the rivals.

The drum sounded for the second time. Then the two wrestlers with their arms, preceded by the four judges and followed by a file of other wrestlers and a large number of attendants entered and very slowly walked around in a triumphant march, with a sort of ceremonies. The spectators had reached a high pitch of excitement. They made all sorts of loud exclamations, cheered their fans, knocked on the balustrades with their hands, and on seeing their public favorites, made signs with their hands, improving their bets on one or the other.

After this combat parade all seated themselves around the ring, the opponents facing each other. The four judges stepped each to one of the four poles and squatted down. The attendants placed a bucket of water and a vessel of sake on the embankment.

The wrestlers took off their aprons and, as they jumped into the ring and, after a few minutes, struck a number of athletic attitudes; again the audience rose into a tumultuous applause and the setting increased.

The wrestlers released themselves with a drink of water and a pinch of salt. Then they squatted on the sand, facing each other as a final satisfaction, after which they rose in a dignified manner, their arms slowly extended, and their fingers slightly bent, to catch a blow of the adversary. Then they began to stamp the ground and repeat a rhythm at each other to get a firm grip. Now they gave out one another. Some Giant's on'y endeavor during the whole fight seemed to be to press down his opponent by his weight, and so push him out of the ring. But the cards were not of the Typhoon's ways managed to struggle away from the clasp of feet that threatened to crush him, and he tried to improve his grip at every opportunity. At last he seized his opponent by the leg and made him stop his warlike. The audience roared with laughter. Some Giant once more threw himself on the "kawa" as he called him angry and almost succeeded in bounding him over the line. The two judges nearest them, stand at the line for as soon as one stepped over, the matter was over.

Now the crowd became mad with rage, and his twisting, wriggling, pushing and other maneuvers of the great against the 250 pounds. So they fought for twenty, thirty, forty minutes. Little Typhoon was getting tired, several times he was pressed to the ground and it became more and more difficult to do each other, as they perspired freely. During all this time their movements had become somewhat theatrical, it seemed as if they had learned to pose and exaggerate every situation of the combat. They now lay in great earnest, they now lay on their side, when suddenly Stone Giant lost his footing. Little Typhoon, getting at his strength together, lifted him up from the earth and flung him over the embankment. In truth, a marvelous acrobatic feat.

The judges rose and the manager pronounced Little Typhoon to be the victor. The spectators got up from their seats and shouted and threw presents into the ring. He bowed and bowed again, paying special thanks on his knees. Many scraps of paper came flying down from the tiers, and in the presence of sums of money were announced, and the addresses where he could send for them.

His attendants placed a cloth up and then Little Typhoon slowly marched to his stall.
